

The grid

The night is young... twilight as seen from Sea Ranch, California

One evening in late 2019, author and photographer Arthur Drooker was watching the sunset from his window overlooking the Pacific Ocean and felt inspired to pick up his camera. Over the course of nearly four years, he put together a series of abstract photographs of twilight from the Sea Ranch on the northern California coast. "What makes this particular spot special is the view it affords of sea, sky and horizon," he says. "It's vast and unobstructed, providing the perfect setting to photograph twilight." The resulting soft focus photographs have been collected in a book, Twilight. "It is the time of day I find most captivating. It literally and figuratively refers to gradual decline, so there's a feeling of melancholy associated with it. It's a time for reflection." Kathryn Bromwich arthurdrooker.com

